About HGF Architects

HGF architects, a renowned Pueblo architecture firm, was founded by John Hurtig, Jim Gardner and Norm Froelich. These three architects went to school together at Kansas State and later on, studied under architect Bruce Goff at the University of Oklahoma. Upon graduating, the three architects came to Pueblo and opened the architectural firm HGF Architects. Their designs are well-known to Puebloans, and they have helped shape the landscape of Pueblo by designing buildings like the Sangre de Cristo Arts Center, the Pueblo Plaza Ice Arena, and the Pueblo City Schools (District #60) Administration Building.
